

Database Transactions - Deployment Verification

A transaction is a sequence of database operations treated as one unit.

ACID stands for Atomicity, Consistency, Isolation and Durability.

Atomicity means all operations succeed together or none are applied.

Consistency means a transaction preserves the database constraints.

Isolation prevents concurrent transactions from interfering.

Durability means committed data remains after a server restart.

A bank transfer debits one account and credits another atomically.